Caring for the Coordinator

Tuesday, December 1, 2020 ~ 1:00-2:00 p.m. Eastern

Program Coordinators play a critical role in training programs and are essential to their success. Although there is increasing attention being given to the wellbeing of residents and faculty, particularly during COVID-19, there has been limited discussion surrounding the wellbeing of Program Coordinators.

Objectives:

At the conclusion of the session, learners should be able to:

- Describe factors impacting Program Coordinators, especially during COVID-19;
- Distinguish the importance of well-being among Program Coordinators and lack of empirical research on this topic;
- Provide examples of effective Program Coordinator Well-Being initiatives; and,
- Provide recommendations for developing Program Coordinator well-being initiatives.

Speakers:

Glenda Mutinda, PhD, serves as the Director of Interprofessional Well-being at JPS Health Network in Fort Worth, TX. She holds a doctoral degree in Medical Family Therapy from East Carolina University, and she completed advanced fellowship training in behavioral health immersed in medical residency training programs. Her research interests include well-being of learners, diversity and health equity, and integration of behavioral medicine into residency training.

Holly Stewart, BSW, MSOL, is the Director for Resident Wellness at Northeast Georgia Medical Center in Gainesville, GA. She is responsible for the development and implementation of curriculum, events, and other resources to support the wellbeing of residents, faculty, and support staff. She holds a Bachelor of Social Work, a MS in Organizational Leadership, and is currently pursuing a Doctor of Education from the University of Georgia.

Moderator:

Susan Tovar is Fellowship Coordinator, Graduate Medical Education for HCA Healthcare/USF Morsani College of Medicine GME at Largo Medical Center. Ms. Tovar is also the Chair of AHME's Council of Program Administrators and Coordinators (COPAC).
