

Richard Peng works for the Association of American Medical Colleges as a program leader in ERAS[®]. He joined the AAMC in 2015 and has extensive experience working directly with learners, medical residency and fellowship programs, medical schools, and specialty societies as they navigate the application process for training positions. Richard has created and produced many webinars, learning resources, and support tools for all involved in the recruitment and selection process. He's actively engaged in community-wide collaborations with other committee partners across medical education to improve the entire undergraduate to graduate medical education transition.
